The book begins by examining the history of school safety in America, from the early days of schoolhouse shootings to the more recent tragedies of Columbine and Sandy Hook. The author, Dr. Kenneth Trump, argues that our current school safety system is based on a flawed premise: that we can prevent school shootings by making schools more like prisons.

Dr. Trump argues that this approach is not only ineffective, but it is also harmful to students. He cites research showing that students who attend schools with high levels of security feel less safe and are more likely to experience anxiety and depression. He also argues that these schools are less likely to create a positive learning environment.

So what can we do to create safer schools without turning them into prisons? Dr. Trump offers a number of practical solutions, including:

- Focus on prevention, not punishment. We need to invest in programs that help students develop healthy relationships, resolve conflicts peacefully, and cope with stress.
- Create a positive school climate. Schools should be places where students feel safe, respected, and supported. This means creating a culture of trust and respect, and providing students with opportunities to participate in decision-making.
- Train school staff on how to identify and respond to warning signs. Teachers, administrators, and other school staff should be trained on how to recognize the signs of potential violence, and how to respond appropriately.
- Partner with law enforcement and mental health professionals. Schools should work closely with law enforcement and mental health professionals to develop and implement comprehensive safety plans.

School of Errors is a wake-up call for all of us who are concerned about the safety of our children in schools. Dr. Trump's book provides a clear and concise roadmap for creating safer schools without sacrificing our children's education or well-being.

If you are a parent, a teacher, a school administrator, or a policymaker, I urge you to read this book. It is a must-read for anyone who wants to make our schools safer for all.
