Unveiling the Fort's History

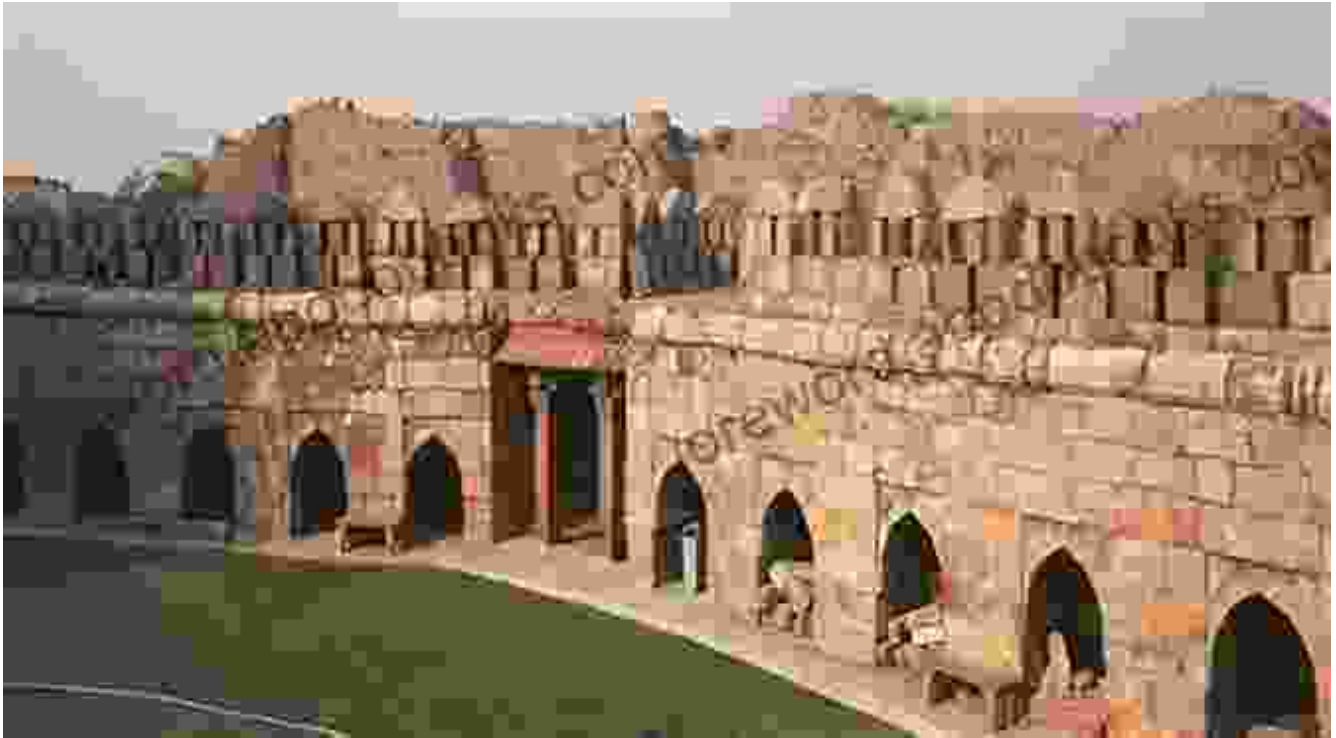

Tughlaqabad Fort was built in 1321-23 as a new capital city for the Delhi Sultanate. The fort's construction was ambitious and its scale immense, enclosing an area of over 6.5 square kilometers. However, the city was abandoned just a few years after its completion due to a lack of water.

Sultan Tughlaq was known for his grandiose visions and innovative architectural designs. The fort's massive stone walls, soaring towers, and intricate gateways showcasing the architectural prowess of the Tughlaq period.

Exploring Architectural Masterpieces

Tughlaqabad Fort is a treasure trove of architectural marvels that reflect the artistic brilliance of the Sultanate period. Its towering walls, once adorned with intricate carvings and decorative elements, have withstood the test of time.

Visitors can marvel at the colossal size and fine craftsmanship of the fort's gates, including the majestic main entrance known as the Adilabad Gate. Within the fort's walls lie the ruins of palaces, mosques, and other structures, offering a glimpse into the lives and customs of its former inhabitants.
